INTRODUCTION

We at the Ħal Tarxien Prehistoric Complex welcome all kinds of visitors and strive to make your stay with us as enjoyable as possible. If you have got any accessibility concerns, please contact us before your visit, and we will help address these concerns.

The Ħal Tarxien Prehistoric Complex consists of a complex of four megalithic structures built between 3800 and 2500 BC and re-used between 2400 and 1500 BC. Discovered in 1913 by local farmers, the site was extensively excavated between 1915 and 1919, with several minor interventions carried out in the 1920s, by Sir Themistocles Zammit, Director of Museums at the time.

The earliest of the four structures, located at the easternmost end of the site and built sometime between 3800 and 3200 BC, survive only to near ground level although its five-chambered plan is still clearly visible. The South Complex, the most highly decorated of megalithic buildings with its relief sculpture and the lower part of a colossal statue of a skirted figure, and the East Complex, with its well-cut slab walls, were built between 3150 and 2500 BC. The Central Complex was constructed with its unique six-chambered plan and contains evidence of corbelled roofing.

Of the four structures, three were substantially reconstructed by Zammit during the excavation itself with further interventions taking place in the 1960s. They contain highly decorated stone blocks and screens, reliefs of domestic animals and spirals, the colossal statue and a number of carved features, one of which contained a flint knife and animal bones. Their location and the relationship with the Prehistoric Complex itself are our best indications of the type of activities which took place on site. Tarxien has also contributed to the study of the construction of these megalithic structures with the discovery of stone spheres, which have been interpreted as stone rollers, used as aids for the transportation of the megaliths. Remains of cremation found at the centre of the South Complex indicate that the site was re-used as a Bronze Age cremation cemetery, between 2400 and 1500 BC.

THE COMPLEX

ENTRANCE

The main door of the visitor centre serves as both the entrance and the exit to the site. It is 130cm wide and is kept open during opening hours. A small step measuring 4cm leads from the sidewalk into the visitor centre. Another door forming an antechamber has to be physically opened in order to gain access and has the same width as the main door. Another door of the same width leading from the visitor centre to the site opens automatically.

RECEPTION, GIFTSHOP AND TICKETING AREA

This area is on the ground floor level, with no steps within it, a small 2cm ledge leads to the outside area. The floor is tiled, and the area is illuminated by means of overhead lighting. The area is also climatically controlled.

A wheelchair is available for loan free of charge on request.

The site gift shop is situated in one wing of the main area. This gift shop contains books, jewellery, souvenirs etc. Beverages are also available for purchase from the gift shop. The shop is wheelchair accessible, although some items are displayed on high shelves. Visitors should ask staff for assistance if required.

In the other wing of the main area, a glass cabinet contains artefacts. These artefacts might not be visible below 79cm. A display of other stone artefacts is also held in the area. Touching artefacts and megaliths is not permitted for conservation purposes.

THE MEGALITHIC REMAINS

Information panels are found in points of interest around the attraction at a height of 100cm. Images are found on the information panels where relevant. The information panels are in Maltese and English.

An elevated walkway surrounds the megalithic structures and allows visitors access to specific areas within the structures. This walkway is accessible through a ramp, and is completely wheelchair accessible for wheelchairs 60cm wide or less. Visitors can make use of a wheelchair found on-site free of charge during their visit if their wheelchair is wider than 60cm.

Seating and waste bins are available at specific points along the walkway. A rest area is also available in the southern section of the site.

A large protective shelter is found over the ancient structures. This, other than protecting the megaliths, also protects the visitors in inclement weather.

Touching the Megaliths, eating, smoking and stepping off the walkway are not permitted inside the site.

Toilets

Toilets are located on the ground floor of the complex and are accessible from the outside area of the site. The door to the toilets opens outwards to the left, the opening is 100cm wide. There are three cubicles measuring 70cms wide and another cubicle which is wheelchair accessible measuring 90cms wide. In the accessible toilet, one finds a wall-mounted horizontal nappy changing table with weight resistance of a maximum of 30kgs.

All toilets are Unisex, and the area is well-lit by means of fluorescent lighting.

Additional Information

All of our staff are regularly trained and are there in order to make your visit as pleasant as can be. Our staff will happily answer queries about local eateries and other areas of interest nearby. The staff will also put forward any questions of an archaeological nature to the curators of the site, who will see that the query is answered in a timely manner.

We welcome trained assistance dogs. A water bowl is available on request. We regret that pets are not permitted anywhere in the Museum. Pet dogs are, however, permitted on the grounds if they are held in the hands of the owner throughout their stay.
